

The Tale of Bergamot Bunny

The Tale of Bergamot Bunny

This book is a collaboration between Violet and The Moonlight Seedling aka Bekah Stockwell.

The story was submitted as an entry into a competition to find Miss Bergamot's name and then edited and illustrated as an introduction to Bergamot Bunny's other coming works.

Bergamot Bunny was born in a field next to an Earl Grey tea factory in England.

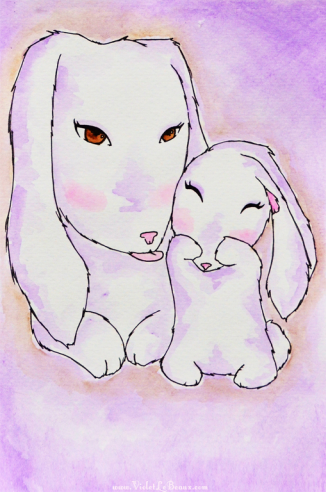

She grew up playing in the grounds with her Mum and brothers and sisters.

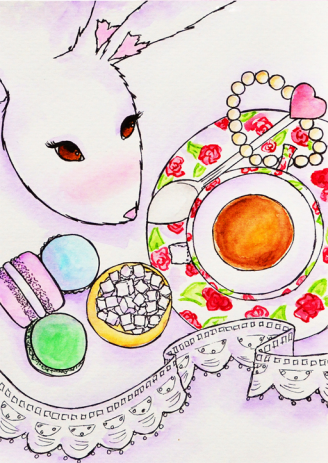

While her family was perfectly happy frolicking in the field and eating carrots, Bergamot liked to sneak into the factory and sample the fragrant tea.

She loved nibbling on the delicious scones the workers would leave out for her.

She spent so much time in the tea factory that her soft fur became scented with the delicious bergamot oils. Because of this, her Mother named her after them.

The factory workers spent a lot of time playing with Bergamot. They shared their hobbies with her so she was able to try out sewing, crafting and eating as many macarons as she could fit in!

As she spent more time with the staff, Bergamot began to enjoy a lot of the finer things in life.

The factory workers dubbed her the “Lady of the Factory” which made her blush so hard that it never went away!

The staff made Bergamot's family a nice cozy hutch in the garden so they would be warm for the Winter.

It had fluffy pillows for sleeping, pink wallpaper, and all the tea and scones they could possibly want.

One day a website on a staff member's laptop caught Bergamot's eye.

It had a delicate floral background, adorable photos and pink everywhere!

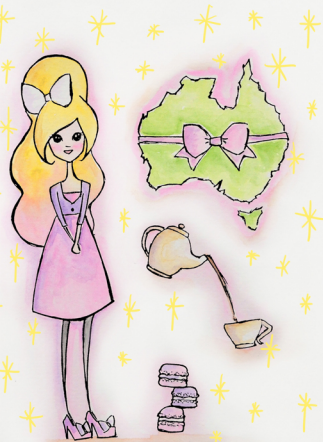

The website had tutorials on how to make cute clothes and accessories, beauty tips and everything looked so pretty!

Bergamot's eyes became so wide and sparkly looking at all of the beautiful things she wanted to try!

The kind staff member stayed back after work and they spent the entire night browsing the old posts together.

She told Bergamot all about the girl who ran the website...

The girl's name was Violet and she lived all the way across the world in Australia.

She was always doing fun things, absolutely adored tea and just happened to also love little white bunnies!

Bergamot Bunny was enchanted. She wanted to go meet this wonderful lady and learn how to make pretty things!

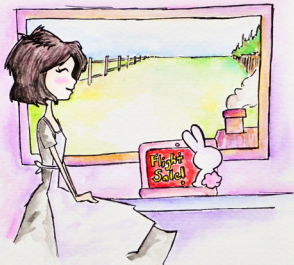

However, being a bunny, she was used to being around a large family, and worried that she would be lonely with only one friend so far from home.

To make Bergamot feel better, the worker showed her Miss Violet's partner in crime – James!

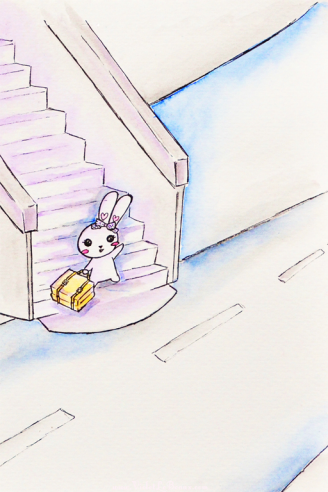

He could cook lovely things, take great photos and provide comic relief. Because James was from America, many of the foods he made seemed to confuse Miss Violet and that made it even more fun!

Bergamot briefly wondered how someone could survive eating only cake.

So it was decided – Bergamot would go to live with Miss Violet and James in Australia!

She wanted it to be a surprise for Miss Violet though, so her flight and plans were booked in secret.

She stitched a little bow out of a scrap of lace to look her prettiest, hugged her family and factory friends good-bye and hopped on a plane to Melbourne Australia!

The next thing she knew,
Bergamot Bunny was sitting on Miss Violet's doorstep with her lovely bunny smile and a big box of Earl Grey tea from the factory!

When Violet and James answered the door they were very surprised but fell in love with Bergamot Bunny immediately!

The three of them lived happily ever after together making cute things and drinking tea (except for James because he was weird and didn't like tea).

The end!

Thanks for reading ^__^

♥ Bergamot, Violet, and James
(who is not weird!)

Thank you to all of the friends (both online and real life) and family members who have put up with me all the way through this project right from the time Bergamot was just an inkling of an idea. I wouldn't have had the motivation or the slight craziness to start something like this without your encouragement and late night chats.

Thanks for reading!
